The present invention relates to an image forming apparatus capable of handling various printing apparatuses, a printing apparatus capable of handling various image forming apparatuses, and a print communication system which make possible a communication between a plurality of computers such as a host computer and a printer, an image forming apparatus, and a printing apparatus. Many of image forming apparatuses capable of printing data sent from a host computer or the like are connected to a printer, so as to make it possible for users of computers in general to use the printers. In recent years, it has become common to connect a plurality of image forming apparatuses to an in-house network so as to form a printing system. In such a printing system, a host computer and a plurality of image forming apparatuses, including a digital copying machine, are connected to each other through the in-house network, so as to share the resources of the image forming apparatuses. However, the printers that are widely used at present are manually operated, so that they cannot be directly connected to a network that has a large capacity like a wide area network (WAN). Therefore, network printers are widely used. In recent years, a plurality of image forming apparatuses or printers have been connected to a network, with the result that users of computers could access the image forming apparatuses or printers through a network. Especially, in the case of using the image forming apparatuses or printers as copiers in an office, computers of a number corresponding to the capacity of the network and the number of users are connected to the network, and the image forming apparatuses or printers are connected to the network, so that most of the users can use the image forming apparatuses or printers. Such a configuration enables the users to, for example, copy printed materials by themselves, without relying on the personnel of the office. The network printers or scanners enable the users to edit image data in order to provide, for example, users with data items that have been printed out. With this configuration, the cost of the printing system can be reduced. However, conventional printers are basically connected to a local area network, and the printers have no high degree of versatility. Therefore, it has been pointed out that when an image forming apparatus that has a high degree of versatility is connected to a network and image data is sent from the image forming apparatus to the network printer, the number of persons using the network printer decreases, thereby degrading the efficiency of the network printer.

What's New In?

Stade de l'Aréna The Stade de l'Aréna () is a football stadium in Marseille, France, located on the border of the ancient, Saint-Vincent quarter of the city, in the Calanques district. It is the home ground of Olympique de Marseille, and seats 54,008 spectators. The stadium is a large, rambling, soulless stadium that sits amongst the ruins of the destroyed Paris Commune which was declared a national monument in 1989, and is used as a tourist attraction by the local population. It was built on the site of the old Porte d'Athènes. History The venue, having opened in 1947, was originally the home of AS Saint-Esteve, before the club moved to the Parc des Princes in 1954. A single-tiered main stand was erected on the eastern side in 1977. In 1973, the ground hosted seven matches of the UEFA Intertoto Cup, with the final held on 11 May 1973. Marseille won this final 5–2 against the Belgian team OH Leuven. In 1989, Stade de l'Aréna was declared a national monument, and was registered as the 12th Monument historique in France. After the stadium's original PARCS de Saint-Esteve closed in 2000, Olympique de Marseille, with the intention of using the old stadium as their new home, purchased the land around the stadium. The stadium was closed and demolished in 2002, with a new stadium being built on the site in 2004. The new all-seater stadium, with a capacity of 54,000, was officially opened on 5 February 2010 by José Mourinho. During the remodelling process, the pitch, which was covered in grass, was replaced with an artificial clay-based surface, previously used by the stadia in Reims and Rouen. The pitch was re-sodded in late 2018. Structure The stadium features a Western Stand, and an Eastern Stand, covering the north and south sides of the pitch respectively, the former of which has a capacity of 8,000 and the latter of 4,000. The north stand is the smaller stand, but is the more modern one. The stadium is situated along the A51 autoroute, between No.5 and No.6 roads. The stadium also includes the new residential block of Marseille Parc, which opened
