An object placed over another object allows a portion of both objects to show through. This concept is also used in video editing. The most common editing tool is the paintbrush tool. When working in layers, this tool is usually used to change the opacity of layers using the tool. When working in Photoshop's Layers panel, you should always check the Levels window to see the opacity of each layer. Levels allows you to change the opacity of layers and to add a black and white effect. The Channels window shows you what colors are going into a layer. Photoshop gives you a tool similar to the brush tool. Click-and-drag the tool over your image. The area you drag with the tool automatically becomes the brush. To retouch image areas, use the brush tool and create a new layer. Use the layer's tool palette to change the brush, brush size, brush opacity, brush hardness, and other parameters. The Eraser tool works like the brush tool. Click-and-drag an area and paint to destroy it. By default, the color of the hit area and the surrounding area turns black, resulting in a darkening effect. You can change the color of the hit area and the surrounding area by selecting them using the eyedropper and changing their color. The Smart Brush tool gives you the ability to drag over image areas and make them soft, semitransparent, or even remove parts of the image. Drag-and-drop the tool on your image. Steps Ensure you have a 10.3 MB Photoshop CS5 or higher installation on your computer. Click the Photoshop icon on your computer's desktop. Click "File" and then "Open." While you might not use Photoshop for serious image editing, Photoshop Elements is a great and powerful tool for editing images, graphics and photos. For those who want access to the full version of Photoshop without paying the monthly fee, you can download Photoshop Creative Cloud for free for 30 days. Creative Cloud allows you to edit your files inside the app, without installing a desktop app. Elements offers many of the most common editing tools, such as filters, effects, retouching tools, toning, color, editing, and even specialised features like photo organization and text creation. There is also an excellent online community that you can participate in, where Photoshop users share tips, tricks, and results of their work. Another feature that makes Elements even more useful for graphic designers is Photo Erase. It makes it easy to remove/replace someone's face with your own, just by masking in the unwanted areas of their face and clicking the overlay icon. This is good for image branding and social media platforms. What's New In?

Found: Missing-in-action Mariners Jason Bay Some Mariners fans are hoping for a miracle and wish the outfielder came down with the flu or needed to see a doc while he was playing. The Mariners are considering the fact that he might have told reporters the injury was “something minor,” so they are giving him a couple of days to make up his mind. If the cancer isn't back, they get to take the terrible news a little easier. If it is back...well, they think people won't like it, either.

Today, Bay's lumbar spine fractured while he was getting up to run to first. When he got up, he said he got the bug and knew he wouldn't make it. Good thing it didn't last. He's home now and gone for surgery on Monday. The Mariners are searching for someone to fill in as part of a platoon with Chris Taylor. C.J. Wilcox is the backup outfielder, with a .222/.333/.312 line, but he has played just 15 games at the MLB level. The Mariners have been using Wilcox sparingly for the better part of a month, but over the last week, he has played in seven games as they “tried” to get injured players back into the lineup. Yesterday was his first start. He seems like he could hit the ball well enough to work around in a pinch. But the ball looks bad, even for a minor-league ball. His strikeout rate is down from about 30% last year to 19% so far this year. He has hit four home runs in 138 at-bats, so he isn't hitting them very often, but he has been the type to hit them when they come. He has been in the line-up because Michael Saunders was on the disabled list and he had been playing good, he has faced most of the teams he has faced. He has fared well.
