During adolescence, the number of proliferating BN/GRP-r-positive cells increases and they actively migrate along the crypts. ), might be a viable goal for BERT. \[fig:condensed:metrics\] shows a subset of results highlighting the ability of BERT to capture relative clauses of the type *I was living in a house/apartment/complex*. BERT generates *I was living in a house\_CORP that square\_color = blue*, suggesting a successful entailment, which is produced by matching the single prefix for *house\_CORP* with the full noun phrase *house\_CORP square\_color = blue*. By contrast, the closed query of *"was living in a house"* is a short form for a relative clause, and to produce a valid response to the open phrase $E_0$, sub-parts of the "base" mentions, *I was\_VERB* and *that square\_color = blue* would have to be matched. BERT, however, is able to recognize the sentence *I was living in a house\_CORP that square\_color = blue*, which is a valid response for the open sentence *"I was living in a house."* !\[fig:condensed:metrics\] Example output of the BERT model, with "BERT" indicating BERT response.](metrics.pdf){width="0.8\columnwidth"} Tables \[tab:square\_metadata:BERT:basic\] and \[tab:square\_metadata:BERT:opinion\] show some additional examples of BERT responses to several of the questions we designed, split into various categories. Tables \[tab:square\_metadata:BERT:basic\] and \[tab:square\_metadata:BERT:opinion\] show that BERT is capable of generating language which appears to be chosen intentionally in a manner consistent with the choices of the labeler. For example, the BERT responses to the (most generic question, only the "last word" version) "What is the most important aspect of this stamp collection?" differ from the responses to the (most narrow) question "What is the aspect of this collection that is a key element?".
