i = 0; for (i = 0; i > 2)); } return 0; } I tried it, it works fine, then I run it as root, instead of the normal user. It works fine as a normal user, but when I run it as root, I got a following error. Tested under Ubuntu 16.04, i386. $./t ERROR allocating memory $./t root ERROR allocating memory $ sudo./t -bash:./t: No such file or directory $ ./t -1 Tested under Ubuntu 16.04, i386. $ sudo ./t -1 ./t: error while loading shared libraries: libstdc++.so.6: cannot open shared object file: No such file or directory Any advice? I can't google the solution, seems like the solution is related to dynamic loading of shared libraries, but I have no idea how to go around it... A: As you see, the command tried to load the library dynamically (both normal and root case). So I would suggest you to build the library and load it statically. Like this: #include #include #include

Q: How can I test that individual columns of my pivot table are the same using a data set with multiple unique item IDs? I am using pivot tables in tableau. I need to verify that the pivot table columns (apart from the grouped by columns) are the same for all item ids. So I want to verify that the values of the columns that are not grouped by are the same. Is there a way to do this? A: I think you need to use a pivot filter instead of a pivot table. Using a pivot table you have the option to show some other data that you aren't using. A pivot filter will only show the part of the data that you have selected to group. Something like this (may need to play with the sliders to get exactly what you want) The invention relates to an apparatus for controlling combustion in a gas turbine in which a compressed gas is supplied through control valves to the combustor. The nozzle diaphragm of a gas turbine must operate in the presence of a differential pressure which varies with the design of the turbine. In most designs, the nozzle ring is separated from the combustor by a duct wall which has a progressively decreasing surface area and thus can be seen as a spring. When the nozzle diaphragm moves in, this action is transferred to the combustor area. When the nozzle diaphragm moves out, its pressure differential against the combustor diaphragm forces the combustor diaphragm out. In the process, the pressure in the combustor varies and a difference pressure can appear there. An opposite variation occurs in the duct section and can result in a very small loss of pressure in the duct that will be referred to as the duct spring. Such a spring effect can cause a differential pressure on the diaphragm which must be compensated by diaphragm springs to ensure combustion.This subproject is one of many research subprojects utilizing the resources provided by a Center grant funded by NIH/NCRR.
