Autologous priming with monocyte-derived macrophages enhances transduction of DNA encoding the survival factor bcl-XL into human tumour cells. A major obstacle to the expression of transgenes in tumours is loss of the gene as a result of defects in DNA repair and/or deficiencies in the DNA-repair machinery. The low repair capacities and/or lack of targeting of tumour cells after in vivo DNA transfer by conventional approaches may be overcome by autologous priming with monocyte-derived macrophages, which have higher repair capacities and can be targeted to tumour cells in vivo. Transduction efficiencies of the bcl-XL gene coding for the survival factor bcl-XL into A-204 cells, a human brain tumour cell line, were evaluated after in vitro transfection with loxP-flanked bcl-XL plasmids and subsequent application of the agents IL-4 and IL-10 as macrophage-priming agents. The priming effect was compared with transfer of the gene by conventional transfection with lipofectin. The efficiency of transfection by the two strategies and of bcl-XL transgene expression were similar, with 72.4 +/- 2.3% of cells in the IL-4 group and 73.9 +/- 4.5% in the lipofectin group. After macrophage priming, transfection was significantly enhanced by IL-4 and IL-10, with 97.7 +/- 1.2% and 96.6 +/- 1.7% of cells showing bcl-XL expression, respectively, compared with 43.7 +/- 8.0% and 40.0 +/- 6.9% in the control groups. Autologous priming with macrophages enhances transfection by DNA-based gene therapy protocols and has a potential to enhance the efficacy of gene therapy of cancer. This invention relates to automated data analysis techniques and more particularly to a method and apparatus for modeling time series data using Kalman filtering techniques. Time series data is used to describe the evolution of most physical and economic processes in the world. Examples of typical sources of time series data include the stock market, electronic fund transfer processing, industrial control systems, weather data, crop yield data, aircraft flight data, and patient data from hospitals, pharmaceutical companies, and chemical companies. These time series data may be continuous in time or discontinuous in time, and can have dimensions in time, space, and

LUCKNOW: Over half of “educated unemployed” people do not have proper skills or lack know-how to get easily employed, in a country where the youth are well-educated but have “not been converted” into active citizens with solid skills and assets, government and industry representatives will debate at the ninth biennial conference of IFS in Lucknow on Friday. The IFS conference comes a year after Prime Minister Narendra Modi launched Skill India Mission in August 2015 to create 10 lakh skilled people by 2022. Around 6.5 lakh applications were received for the first round and officials said “tough selection” is going to take place in the second round. Speaking at the conference, Rajiv Kumar, director general of IFS, said over 50% of the un-skilled “educated unemployed”, had limited academic or non-academic skills. “The tragedy is if we seek to resolve unemployment of the un-skilled educated people, our country will continue to suffer the ill-effects of poverty and ill-governance,” said Kumar. He added that only 27% of the total rural and urban population had been able to avail the benefits of skill-based education, although it is a big percentage. He claimed “untouchable” communities have reduced their skill levels due to pressure on parents from parents and family to send their daughters for higher education. Another startling revelation is about family and community structures. Ramesh Kumar Sinha, vice-chairman of IFS, has said in his presentation that in India, “mentors” and “experts” are not fully accepted in families and within communities. He said about 70% of Indians are “culturally disturbed” when it comes to accepting their role as mentors and experts. “If we want to bring about change, it needs to be a team effort but not a self-motivated one,” said Kumar. Later in an interaction with TOI, Sinha said “only about 30% of India’s geographical terrain could be accessed” for skill development, although India is the world’s second-largest economy. It costs Rs 1.5 lakh to train an individual on a computer-based skill, he said. The government has set up 12 skills councils in different states to train more unemployed youth, but he claimed most are not being effective. “What India needs is adequate funding and budget allocation for skill development in the government
