application that paints the screen with a custom control. While it is painted I want to capture the Mouse event, so I can handle the MouseMove event. But if I try to capture it in the Paint event, it does not work. So how can I capture the Mouse events during the paint cycle. Is there a reason for this behaviour? A: If you want to capture mouse events during painting, then what you need to do is to set the IsHitTestVisible property of the custom control to false. It's by default true, which causes the mouse events to be captured during the paint cycle. This will not capture the mouse events while your control is being painted. You should also be able to use the IsMouseEnabled property. I don't see why this shouldn't work in the same way as IsHitTestVisible.

Texas Child Support Paternity Registry The Texas Parentage Registry Services (TPRS) is a group of volunteer advocates for supporting children whose biological parents are unknown. The TPRS was founded by a small group of Texans who have chosen to use the services of volunteer parents to gather relevant information in order to locate the biological parents of children in Texas who are unclaimed by their respective parents. The TPRS began in June of 2010, and currently has over 1,600 volunteer workers. While the Registry is a relatively new organization, it has been able to c6a93da74d
